Problem Statement:

- Too much time is wasted looking for places to eat, especially when it is a mutual decision. The wasted time can lead to irritability and an increase of negative emotions on top of the fact that this is usually accompanied by hunger.

What is the problem?

- There are often too many options when it comes to choosing where to eat, causing analysis paralysis and ultimately wasting time.

Who experiences the problem?

- This problem can apply to anyone, whether you are in a new area or you simply can't decide what to eat. Almost everyone at some point or another has struggled picking a place to eat.

Where does the problem present itself?

- This problem can present itself on any given day. Usually presented at a time when deciding what or where to eat and there are too many choices.

Why does it matter?

- This problem matters because time and energy can be wasted when deciding what type of food or where to eat. People already have a tendency to become irritable when hungry and making a decision on where to eat can increase negative emotion. In the modern age with the prevalence of technology there can often be too many options in everyday life.
